We eagerly await your presence at the American Airpower Museum to commence a new era of business

After defying a policy characterized as “restrictive” by the central bank, the labor market in the United States slowed down from the creation of over 300,000 new jobs in March, to 175,000 in April, also below the monthly average of 247,000 new jobs created throughout the year ending last March. The unemployment rate increased to 3.9 percent in April, from 3.8 percent in March, while wages also decreased from a year earlier to 3.9 percent, from 4.1 percent in March. There was also a sharp decrease in economic growth, from 3.4 percent in the last quarter of 2023, to 1.6 percent in this year’s first quarter, which complicated the outlook because it coincided with a reversal in the declining trend in inflation. The personal consumption price index increased 3.4 percent during this year’s first quarter, after remaining below 3 percent during the previous three quarters.

However, despite these indicators of a slowdown, consumer spending remained strong, increasing at an annual rate of 2.5 percent in the first quarter of this year, slightly less than at the end of last year. Even so, some analysts interpreted the increasing trend in inflation, together with less economic growth, as a sign of “stagflation.” But the head of the central bank Jerome Powell dismissed this concern saying, “I don’t see the stag or the flation.”

Después de desafiar la política caracterizada como “restrictiva” por el banco central, el mercado de trabajo en Estados Unidos se desaceleró, desde la creación de más de 300,000 nuevos empleos en marzo, a 175,000 en abril, también debajo del promedio mensual de 247,000 nuevos puestos de trabajo creados a lo largo del año que terminó en marzo pasado. La tasa de desempleo aumentó a 3.9 por ciento en abril, desde 3.8 por ciento en marzo, mientras que los salarios disminuyeron a 3.9 por ciento desde el año pasado, desde 4.1 por ciento en marzo. También hubo una disminución pronunciada en el crecimiento económico, desde 3.4 por ciento durante el último trimestre de 2023, a 1.6 por ciento durante el primer trimestre de este año, lo cual complicó el panorama porque coincidió con una reversión de la tendencia declinante de la inflación. El índice de precios de consumo personal aumentó 3.4 por ciento durante el primer trimestre de este año, después de permanecer debajo de 3 por ciento durante los tres trimestres anteriores.

Sin embargo, a pesar de estos indicadores de desaceleración, el gasto de consumo permaneció fuerte, aumentó a una tasa anual de 2.5 por ciento en el primer trimestre de este año, levemente menos que al fin del año pasado. Algunos analistas interpretaron la tendencia creciente de la inflación, junto al menor crecimiento económico, como indicio de “estanflación.” Pero el presidente del banco central Jerome Powell rechazó esa preocupación diciendo, “No veo ni el estan ni la flación.”
